

students or faculty at their institution, (2) sell subscriptions, and (3) write a "Practical Guide to the Study of Folklore" at their institution (see the introductory note to this series of informative articles in Folklore Forum 17:1). For more information, write to The Editors, Folklore Forum, 504 North Fess, Bloomington, IN 47405.

CONTRIBUTORS

Regina Bendix is a Ph.D. candidate in the Folklore Institute at Indiana University. She recently returned from Switzerland and is currently working on her dissertation.

Tina Bucavalas is currently affiliated with the Historical Museum of Southern Florida.

Linda S. Chang is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Romance Languages and Literatures at Ohio State University.

Gregory Hansen is a graduate student at Western Kentucky University. He is presently completing his Master's thesis while working as a folklorist/consultant for Bear Creek Camp, Bear Creek, PA.

Jan Laude is a Ph.D. candidate at The Folklore Institute, Indiana University.

W.K. McNeil holds a Ph.D. in Folklore from Indiana University and is the folklorist at the Ozark Folk Center in Mt. View, Arkansas.

Eric Montenyohl is currently affiliated with the University of Southwestern Louisiana.

Enoch Timpunza Mvula is a Ph.D. candidate at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University.

Norma Ortiz, a former student in the Folklore Institute, received her M.A. in Folklore in 1974 and her candidacy degree in Folklore in 1975. She works in the Special Collections at the University of Arkansas Libraries.

Kenneth D. Pimple completed his M.A. degree in Folklore in 1986, and is currently working toward a Ph.D. at the Folklore Institute of Indiana University.

L.C. Rudolph is a church historian and librarian, presently Curator of Books at Lilly Library of Indiana University.

Moiria Smith is a Ph.D. candidate at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University.

Mary Beth Stein is a Ph.D. candidate at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University.

Barbara Truesdell is a M.A. candidate at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University.

John B. Wolford is a Ph.D. candidate at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University.